

An X-ray is a type of radiation that can pass through soft tissue like skin and bone. It can be used to detect fractures or other abnormalities in bones. X-rays are usually taken by radiologists, but can also be taken by other healthcare professionals, such as dentists.

